Some people speak languages. Some people speak in metaphors. Some people talk in riddles. DJ Khaled speaks in the language of italics. The pop-musical blanket-master is a serial highlighting. His latest album, Father Asahd, he tells me, was impossible- to get that many stars on one album, you try it, and yet, I did it. As for why he thought the album was so powerful, he adds: Because everyone comes up with their game, or more than their game. But stress is not only reserved for self-aggrandizement. Sometimes, well, often, he just got into a state of reverence. He impressed his friend, the famous chef Salt Bae, for example, because he came from nothing, and now he owns restaurants around the world ... The United States, and the world. It was this enthusiastic expression of an untainted miracle that helped make Khaled a superstar in his own right. His brazen accent turns the otherwise mundane into grandiose statements, culture-forming phrases, and widely consumed motivation. He is unapologetically loud, bold and brash, and the culture eats him up. Of course, you can take issue with some of them-his simplicity, carnival barker it all, or you might if he doesn't always find his way back to such an undeniably positive message: Love. Take his legacy. When all this is said and done, Khaled says he wants to be remembered as one of the biggest, most powerful tycoons. But also, an incredible father, with a family that is beautiful and amazing. Someone who is loved and embraced by love. He justifies the accent. GW: Congratulations! I heard your wife is pregnant with another child. DJ Khaled: Yes, man, Asahd will have a brother. I'm going to have another son, another blessing. God is great. Our family is just getting bigger. Since my son Asahd was born, life has changed in many beautiful, great ways. I just appreciate life more and what true love is. And I'm so excited, man. I'm just glad to have a barbecue with my family. I am very happy to go on a family holiday. I'm happy to work for my family. I love being a father. I thought it was funny that some headlines said: Another! Asahd said: Another! Too. It is. This is another one, you know what I'm saying? What I like about my phrases is that it's just me - it's me, and it's natural, and the world accepts them. You've probably heard of DJ Khaled, but you can't be sure what he's doing. (Don't worry, it gets that much.) Chances are you heard one of his songs this spring or summer, bumping into the dynamics of a car cruising through. Khaled currently has three tracks on the Billboard Hot 100 list, and he dropped out of his new album, Grateful, on June 23. The star-studded Grateful features guests including Beyonce and Jay-zee, Drake, Rihanna, Justin Bieber, Chance the Rapper, Nas, Alicia Keys, Nicki Minaj and more. This is Khaled's 10th album. He has previously produced such like All I Do Is Win and We Takin' Over, but he's never been as big a star as he is today. Today, 18 Strange Things You Didn't Know About Mark Zuckerberg Was Born in New Orleans to Palestinian Immigrant Parents in 1975, he grew up in Louisiana and Florida and helped with his family's business. When times got tough, he worked odd jobs and eventually worked his way up to become a prominent radio DJ in Miami, Florida, and a producer of albums Fabolous, Terror Squad and Fat Joe. He founded his label We The Best Music Group in 2007, and today it is an imprint of Epic Records. With its newest release, it's hard to say whether the 41-year-old music producer, born Khaled Mohamed Khaled, is better known for his music or for his social media following. He has 6.5 million Instagram followers and several million Snapchat followers (Snapchat hides such numbers), and is known for posting videos of himself with his eight-month-old son Asach (who is featured on the cover of Grateful) or jet skiing (getting lost in the sea). Khaled's ability to accumulate a list of A-List employees and sky-high followings, not to mention various endorsement deals, speaks not only to his ability to promote himself. This is testament to his expert networking skills and relatability, as well as his tremendous work ethic. Last fall, he published a book called Keys, detailing the keys to success that he shared in interviews, in advertising and of course on social media. For the uninitiated, here are seven tidbits to help you get to know DJ Khaled. Early last year, Khaled signed with Apple Music and launched his own Beats 1 radio show, We The Best Radio. Every Friday he shares a playlist of songs, and sometimes with guests for interviews. Khaled also appeared in an Apple Music commercial with Ray Lioth and Naomi Campbell. In May, his 2017 track I'm the One broke the record for the most songs ever broadcast in a week on the platform - earlier this week it debuted at number one on the Billboard Hot 100. Related: Apple presents a pretty good take on Shark Tank with its first foray into TV by Khaled's longtime girlfriend, Nicole Tuck, gave birth to a son, Asahd, on October 23, 2016. At the time of delivery, Khaled announced that he planned to document childbirth and childbirth on Snapchat. He followed through, but he didn't veer into graphic territory. He posted photos and videos of him looking at stressed but did not show Tnag's face. He even found a way to incorporate motivational advice: There are no shortcuts to greatness, success, he said, as he eagerly awaited the arrival of his son, knowing that there was no way to speed up the process. Related: 4 Ways to Attract Your Followers on Snapchat In December 2016, the Colombian Organization of Rising Entrepreneurs at Columbia University invited DJ Khaled to speak with Arianna Huffington. Subject? The keys to success, of course. Khaled shared tips such as never play yourself and glorify your success. Huffington, co-founder and general manager Thrive Global and founder and former former of the Huffington Post (now HuffPost), later told Billboard, he has a very natural approach. It is rooted in a deeper stoic philosophy of approaching life so as not to be overwhelmed by events or defeated by adversity. You can watch the performance here. Related: Breaking the glass ceiling begins with a change in workplace culture Khaled has already decided that his son, Asahd, who not even a year ago, is an icon and tycoon in the making. To start a baby career, he put it on the cover of Grateful (sitting in the corner of the hot tub, no less) and gave him executive producer credit. He also frequently shows off his son on social media, including through an Instagram account he has made for him, which already has a million followers. Related: The Secrets of the Woman Who Quit Her Job and made her pug Instagram celebrity Sean Diddy Combs (a.a. same Puff Daddy, or as he called himself, Ciroc Obama) has long endorsed a deal with Ciroc Vodka, owned by drinks company Diageo. But in October 2016, Diddy passed the baton, or rather, the pen, to DJ Khaled. When the company unveiled its newest taste of vodka, mango, he brought DJ Khaled on board as chief ambassador. The video, released in connection with the announcement of the deal, chronicles Khaled's perseverance throughout his career. He co-owns the restaurant with rapper and music producer E-Class, founder of Poe Boy Music Group. When we put this place together, we thought about having good energy, good food, good vibes, representing the community and the city and providing jobs, Khaled said in a video interview with the complex at the finga licking location. Related: 6 rappers who are also franchisees Khaled often talks about his love of Cinnamon Toast Crunch. Speaking to Aziz Ansari, Pharrell and Scott Wener on Beats 1 Othertone, he called breakfast cereal the main key at night and said he sometimes eats it in the studio at 5:00 a.m. He even tweeted back and forth from the official Cinnamon Toast Crunch Twitter account, which complied with his request for photoshop a photo of him on the box. Maybe an endorsement deal with General Mills in Khaled's future? Related: 8 things successful people do before breakfast last Friday, 2014 DJ Khaled interview in which the producer and epic birthday thrower admitted that he refuses to give his wife oral sex because he's the king surfaced and quickly went viral. The clip in question started an internet conversation cunnilingus for ages. And now Rock weighed in, telling everyone that he knows what happened when it comes downhill. I don't do that, Khaled said of Kunniling during an interview on the Breakfast Club radio show. When asked about receiving it from his wife, however, Khaled took a different position. You have to understand, I'm Don. king, he said. These are different rules for men. You have to understand, we are the king. Khaled's stubbornness at his wife is of course a selfish double standard, and the old quote went viral when the entire internet took him to task for him. Hell, even Smash Roth weighed in. Um. It clears my throat, he tweeted. As a person, I'm proud to be mastering all the performances. It's probably a bit of a TMI. Now I calmly excuse myself from this hilarious thread. Great. Interestingly, Rock's partner was absent from the conversation, so the Internet will just have to take their skills at their word. And whether you want to know about his supposed skills in fun or not, Rock and DJ Khaled's comments have started what can be a productive conversation. Celebrity DJ Khaled Rock Rock
